

Bright and cheerful. Positive and optimistic. Trustworthy and honest. Hardworking and proud.

Loving and kind. The list could go on and on, but who am I speaking of? It is a person who always encourages me. Believes in me. Is proud of me. Loves me, and always does his best to help me. Always by my side, and always cares about me. When I'm sick, he stays with me all night. When I'm happy, he feels happy for me. When I'm sad, he grieves for me. When I'm giving up, he encourages me. Through happy times and sad times, he is always there for me. He is my dad.

My dad is a happy man who loves to help others and always finds the good in others. He gives advice to those who seek it, and keeps the secrets of those who confide him. He works hard to support his family and to make his children's future safe and happy. If facing any problems, he manages to solve it in a positive behavior.

When I get a bad mark on a test, he doesn't yell. He asks me what I didn't understand, offers to help me, and tells me I'll do better next time. If I get a good mark, he congratulates me and tells me to keep up the good work. He doesn't bribe, he doesn't yell, because his words are enough. That's what a real dad should be like.

He's amazing. He's fun to be around. He's creative. He's talkative. I love to spend my day with him, even though I don't get much time too. He likes to try new things. He likes to learn new stuff. He always thinks that you must always seek knowledge even when you're old. He's very smart and is always eager to solve any math problem you give to him.

My dad has taught me many things. He taught me to never give up and to believe in myself. He taught me how to be hardworking, and how to let my heart guide me to what is right and what is best for me. He taught me to treat others with respect, and to always be kind. He taught me to love my friends and family. Most important of all, he taught me to learn from my experiences to become successful in life.

My father is my hero. He's the person whom I look up to. He is the one I come to for help. He is the one I come to for advice. He's the one who puts faith in me. He's the one who makes me confident. He's the flicker of hope in me. He's important to me. Words are not enough to explain how much I love him. He's the most precious thing in my life.

No matter what language I say it in... Usted es el gran problema. Vous êtes la grosse affaire. Te vagy a nagy üzlet ... you are the big deal.
